

OVERVIEW

Product: D-Cerno Digital Discussion System

Location: City Council Chambers

With the frequent mix of politics and passionate citizens, City Council meetings in Crawfordsville are interesting, because the messages aren't being properly heard, which leads to miscommunication during monthly City Council meetings.

Dan Wills of Murdock Communication and Sound recommended that the city of Crawfordsville upgrade to better conference equipment from Televic. As the exclusive U.S. distributor of Televic conference systems, Listen Technologies helps businesses provide clear and convenient communication anywhere, any time. The new sound equipment Wills recommended, a D-Cerno Digital Discussion System, offers more clarity whether a participant was speaking or listening during a meeting, regardless of what size room they are in or the number of people participating in the meeting.

The city ordered 22 units, including a new microphone unit for the guest podium, and several wireless receivers that offer those with hearing loss assistive listening tools they need, so that they can also be included in the meetings.

Now that they have fewer miscommunications and a better sound system, Crawfordsville can get back city business.

ABOUT

The City of Crawfordsville, Indiana was founded by a trio of rangers who thought the site looked like a good place to build a settlement clear back in 1813. Since then, it has grown from three rangers to over 15,000 residents and has been consistently ranked as one of the best small towns in America.

“We’ve been periodically updating different parts of the building, and we finally got around to the sound. I think people will be pleased when they attend meetings now.”
